Title: *The earth can only take so much

A finalist in the Indie Excellence 2007 book awards, this may be Swiatek's most important book. Wise men have stated that the earth does not belong to us. Yet, governments and corporations have acted as though there was no end to the resources of the land or in the oceans. Over the last half century, our planet has been besieged by the disasters of Chernobyl, Three Mile Island, Bhopal, Love Canal, the Exxon Valdez, Katrina, and the list seems to never end. Unless we take action now, we'll have no place to live. Fortunately, we have the ingenuity to come up with solutions and Take Back the Earth.

Before retiring from the business world at the end of 2001 after more than twenty-five years, the author was a software consultant for over twenty years, having worked at various corporations throughout the east coast, such as Nestle, Blue Cross, Chase Bank, Digital Equipment Corporation and Sea World. He studied and worked with computers for over thirty years and taught mathematics at high schools in New York and New Jersey for eight years, and has had seven other books self-published, which have gotten excellent reviews that you can read at bobcooks.com, the web site he created and maintains. He also created and maintains the web site of The Authors' Guild of Western New York, authorsguildofwny.com, of which he is the new president – the last one and founder moved to Lost Wages, Nevada in January 2008 (she wasn't impeached.) In addition, he created johnmarszalek.com, the site of the historian and former Buffalo resident. He was born in Buffalo and currently resides there, having lived in a few places in the eastern United States. His degrees are in mathematics, math education and computer science and he has worked as part of environmental groups in toxic Western New York. Two other books that he recently published are This War Won't Cost Much – I'm Already against the Next One and Press 1 for Pig Latin, a book on the failure of technology.
