Title: You can't handle the truth

Some people can't handle the truth, while others can't speak it. Still others can't utter lies. Just like the cover of this book, truth is black and white. The way we live our lives relative to it, is more accurately described as gray. Mirror, Mirror, On My Car takes a look at what truth is and how we find it. There is special emphasis on how it affects a writer – whether in books or in the news. Conspiracies, relationships, sports, the critics, historians, debating, surveys, perception and clues left behind are all considered. As the book illustrates, truth is a complicated matter.

Robert S. Swiatek began writing his first book while teaching high school mathematics in Binghamton, New York almost forty years ago. That book has yet to be published. After teaching for eight years, he then entered the wonderful business world. He left the rat race after twenty-five years to resume his third career as a writer. His first book, The Read My Lips Cookbook was published in November 2002. His writing has been highly praised. for seeing eye dogs only was a 2007 Foreword Magazine finalist. This Page Intentionally Left Blank, Take Back The Earth and wake up – it's time for your sleeping pill were all 2007 Indie Excellence Finalists. A few of his other books are Don't Bet On It, a novel of deception dealing with the national lottery, Press 1 For Pig Latin, which describes the failure of technology and how to fix it, and I Don't Want To Be A Pirate – Writer, maybe. The latter describes his journey as a writer. Information on all his books, including excerpts and reviews can be found at the web site he created and maintains, www.bobcooks.com. He lives in Buffalo, New York and causes trouble for people who act unethically – that's the truth.
